Hiring Team, VytlOne

Dear Hiring Team,

VytlOne's mission-driven work in pharmacy and healthcare is a strong match for the way I like to support users: solve the issue, document the fix, and keep operations moving. In my current and recent support work, I have handled help desk tickets, hardware repairs, access workflows, and end-user troubleshooting in live environments.

At BEAT THE BOMB, I managed help desk tickets, installed and replaced PC hardware components, and took ownership of hardware, operating systems, network, and customer service issues. I also handled account creation and disable workflows, access-related troubleshooting, and onboarding support. That mix maps closely to your need for hardware support, user access work, and resolving hardware, software, and communication problems.

I also wrote SOPs and runbooks to codify repeat fixes, and I improved onboarding efficiency through technical documentation. At the same time, I kept an eye on SLA awareness and clean ticket handling, because the goal was always to resolve issues quickly without losing the details that help the next person. I have also supported recurring access, software, and licensing audit prep by keeping records organized at a small scale.

I work best in environments that value clarity, accountability, and real impact for other teams. In one recent role, I cut the average guest transition wait time from about 10 minutes to 2.5 minutes by reworking the workflow, which reflects how I approach support problems too: remove friction, tighten the process, and make the next handoff easier. I also use Microsoft 365 every day for Outlook, Word, Excel, PowerPoint, Teams, and shared files, so I am comfortable with the tools most service teams rely on.

I would welcome a conversation about how my hardware support, ticketing, access work, and documentation habits can help VytlOne support user departments across the company. Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely, Carlos D. Roman-Conville
